

DELEGATE SELECTION PROCESS

The states are listed alphabetically below; please scroll to your state for information concerning how its 2286 authorized National Republican Convention delegates are selected. (It takes 1143 delegates to select a nominee.) Each state's total number of allotted delegates is shown, usually broken into three categories: RNC, CD and AL.

The RNC delegates are that state's representatives on the Republican National Committee comprised of the GOP State Party Chair and its National Committeeman and Committeewoman.

The CD delegates come from each state's Congressional Districts. They usually are elected either by voters in that state's Presidential Primary or by delegates to the Republican State Convention.

The AL (At Large) delegates are not selected from any specific districts, but rather from the state as a whole. They usually are assigned candidate representation reflecting their state's Presidential Primary results.

Both the AL and CD delegates normally are "bound" to the candidate they represent for a certain voting period during the National Convention. (Examples: one round of convention voting, two rounds, until released by candidate, or by a vote of the entire state delegation.) This "binding" becomes extremely important if the Party's nominee has not been determined by the Primary Elections prior to the National Convention, as the delegates then will be free to vote for a different candidate once they are "unbound." It takes 1143 delegates to nominate the GOP's 2012 Presidential candidate.

If there is a convention or caucus process, it is important to be a part of that process from the beginning, so check the dates carefully and plan to participate either to become a National Delegate yourself or to be sure that those representing your state reflect your pro-life, pro-family values. (There are an equal number of CD and AL alternates elected who would be seated in place of absent delegates. Those spots should also be filled by pro-life, pro-family individuals.)

If a state's delegates are elected on a Primary ballot, then filing deadlines (and sometimes filing fees) apply. The information below will indicate if delegates are elected on a Primary ballot and when delegate candidates must file. Contact the state GOP for specific filing information.

For further information, please contact your state's Republican Party using the link or phone number provided in each state's listing below.
